THE FIGHT IN DILLON'S PLACE.

Manager Kosmac and Porter Gaffney Testify Against Policeman Redmond.

A sensational rumor was floating about the headquarters of the Lexov Palice Investigating Committee, in the Court-House this morning.

It was that Ward Man John Hock, formerly of the F.fth street station, while that precinct was under the command, of Capt. Doherty, had fled from the city in order to escape the clutches of the Investigating Committee.

No attempt, it is said, had yet beer made to subpoena him as a witness yet the mass of testimony which ha olling up against him during the him, so that he decided upon flight as the only way of escaping th consequences.

Has Hock Left the State?

Although the rumor could not b positively confirmed, it was stated that Hock had disappeared from his accustomed haunts yesterday, and that he Senator Bradley, who was one of th first committeemen to arrive at the court-house this morning, brought the story of Hock's flight, and he said that he had hear! it on good authority.

Both Mr. Moss and Mr. Goff expressed great surprise, and said they had not heard anything of the ward n

That How in Dillon's Saloon.

Gus Kosmac, who is the manager of Dillon's saloon at Broadway and Chambers street, came forward and told the story of the row which occurred in the saloon night before last at 6.30, as told in "The World." A big man named William Jackson, who was considerably under the influence of liquor, attacked a smaller man, and began to thump him.

A lively souffle ensued, and Kosmac said he sent Patrick Gaffney, the porter, out for a policeman. Gafney came back soon afterwards with a policeman of the Broadway squad, who arrested Jackson and he was taken to the sta-back soon afterwards with a policeman of the Broadway squad, who arrested Jackson and he was taken to the station in Leonard street. Gaffney said he could not find on post the policeman whose name was William J. Redmond.

On the way to the station, Kosmac and Gaffney, who accompanied the prisoner, met Redmond, and Jackson was turned over to him.

At the station Gaffney made a complaint against Redmond for not being on post.

Nothing, however, was done about this complaint at the station, but Redmond appeared to be very much enraged at Gaffney's interference.

Mr. Jerome then called Patrick Gaffney, the porter of the saloon, and he cor-

Ex-Judge Ransome moved that all the testimony of these two witnesses be stricken from the record, but Chairman lexow refused to grant the request. The next witness called was Carl Werner, who said he had graduated from a textile school in Austria, and came to this country thirteen years and went into the wool business.

This failed, and he kept a saloon for a while, when he got into trouble, he said, with the District-Attorney's office. What the trouble was he did not state, nor did Mr. Nicoli bring it out, but the result was that Werner said he went to the State prison at Sing Sing for seven years.

"What suri of a house was it?" asked Mr. Jerome.
"A ladles' boarding-house."
"Do you mean a disorderly house?"
"Yes, I suppose you would call it that. I took the house in January, 1822, and kept it until November, 1833. I have been out of business since then."
Werner said that a man named Hlatt was his landlord, and he also owned the houses at 8, 10, 12, 14 and 16 Delancey street. He paid $140 a month rent for the house, and said that six girls lived in the house all the time.

Hot Springs, Ark, as a result of injuries received by being thrown from a carriage.

The cowboy, Edwards, of Montclair, was one of three vicious brothers who had been the terror of the residents of Montclair for some months.

They came to Montclair several years ago, and stories of their dexterity with revolvers in the South and West came with them. They started in at once to keep up their frontier reputation for "doing" their men, and they became involved in numerous rows.

Early Monday morning a hot row started in the house of "Old" Farrell, in Montclair, Bob and Bill Edwards married the Farrel girls and lived with the father-inlaw. The police were summproad, and Policemen Dunlap, Rudden and Perrin went to quell the battle.

They were attacked by the trie of desperate cowboys, and Dunlap and Rudden were badly used up.

For Two the Staten Island Financier Gave Individual Notes.

Spectators were on tiptoe to-day, in anticipation of the defense to be offered by Erastus Wiman in his trial on the charge of forgery, based on one of many like transactions as general manager, with an interest in the business, of the R. G. Dun & Co. mercantile agency. Crowds clamored for admission to the hamber in the white Court House where Justice Ingraham is sitting in Over and Terminer. It is the room where Boss Tweed was convicted, and Jake Sharp, ex-Sheriff James A. mitted to say whether he indorsed it or not.

Over and over again Gen. Tracy has objected to questions put by 2.7. Wellman, on the ground that the answers tended to prove another crime than that for which Mr. Wiman is on trial. Each time Justice Ingraham would overrule the objection he cautioned the jury like this:

"Gentlemen. You are to understand that this is not for the purpose of proving another crime, but is admitted as evidence as to the intent of Mr. Wiman in endorsing the name of E. W. Bullinger on the 5,000 check, which is the subject of this prosecution."

Ogden Brower, of the Campbell Printing Press Manufacturing Company, shown a check for $5.500, drawn by R. G. Dun & Co. in his favor Jan. 20, 183, testified that he never received the check; that the endorsement of his name on it was not written by him, and he never received the money on it. It bore the second endorsement "E. Wiman," and the marks that traced it through the Clearing House to the account of Mr. Wiman in the Chemical National Bank.

There was another for $1,000 in favor

it through the Clearing House to the account of Mr. Wiman in the Chemical National Bank.

There was another for $1,000 in favor of the Campbell Printing Press Company, which went the same course.

To Gen. Tracy, Mr. Brower said his firm received Mr. Wiman's individual notes for the amount of the indebtedness of R. G. Dunn & Co. to them, the sum covered by these checks.

Cyrus H. Taylor recalled, identified the Wiman deposit check for $7.500 in the Central National Bank, Feb. $2.1891.

This is to show that Mr. Wiman was straining every nerve to bring his account up to $187,000, the amount he owed R G Dun & Co., and the implication is that the Fitzgerald, Brown and Campbell Printing Press checks were drawn for this purpose.
